MASTER OF PUBLIC HEALTH IN POPULATION MENTAL HEALTH (MPH)

ABOUT

The Rutgers School of Public Health's Master of Public Health (MPH) in Population Mental Health degree prepares students to address the current challenges in mental health practice and reduce the societal burden of emotional distress, mental illness, substance abuse, alcohol use, and suicide.

Students will be able to identify biological, psychological, structural, socioeconomic, and sociocultural correlates of population mental health, as well as examine the relationship between stigma, mental health, and health inequity.

Graduates will be able to positively impact mental health policy and provide multifaceted interventions and practices to improve mental health and achieve health equity.

Graduates are eligible to sit for the Certified in Public Health Exam.

PROGRAM FORMAT

The MPH in Population Mental Health degree is offered to students on a full-time or part-time basis. Students will complete a total of 45 credits, including a practicum experience and capstone research project.

If completing the program as a full-time student (nine or more credits per semester), the degree requirements may be completed in as little as two years (four to five semesters).

Part-time students taking at least six credits per semester may expect to finish within four years. Taking courses in the summer may help expedite part-time students' timing. Courses are available in-person, remote, and/or online.

Students are also required to register for and complete an Interprofessional Education activity prior to graduation.
